FOREWORD

The Board takes pleasure in announcing that it has added Brothers Snow, Allan and Armes to the Family. The present Manager has completed his college mind and will shortly see him forth to grapple with the problems and jokes of the wide, wild world.

Verily, he will get there! In his absence T. A. Snow, '11, will wield the keys to the Jack-o’Lantern Cigar Chest. H. E. Allan, '12 and H. L. Armes, '12, are jokers and henceforth their pens will skim over the paper more merrily than ever in pursuit of the Bright Idea.

A second Junior is to be elected before the end of February to be Circulation Manager. The lists are now open to Sophomores who wish to compete for assistant managements. Thus next year there will be a Senior Business Manager, a Senior Circulation Manager and two Junior Assistants.

The Literary and Art Departments will be considerably enlarged by another election in May.

For 1910.

Mr. Green—
Resolved: That I will become more attractive or dye in the attempt.

Prof. J. K. Lord—
Resolved: That in my opinion our chaplain is the greatest labor-saving device since the invention of the first Latin trot.

Prof. Worthy—
Resolved: That it is useless to blow my own horn when so many are tooting for me.

Cupid Fay—
Resolved: That I will do my utmost to look as cute as my name.

Mr. Bays—
Resolved: That I despise a slow life and yet although I’m tied down here in Hangover, I will not let my life be fastened.

Cheerless—
Resolved: That I will dress as Sunny Jim and wear a smile as wide as Clothespin’s dog is long.

Dottaw Slicklider—
Resolved: That I am, she is, we are; but that nobody else is.

Bill: “Come over to the room tonight and have some cider.”
Will: “Nope, don’t like it.”
Bill: “Well, come over and have a cigar.”
Will: “Don’t smoke, thanks.”
Bill: “Well, say! Come over any time.”

Happy: “What smells the most in a drug store?”
Heinie: “Don’t know, I’m sure. Perhaps a Roman nose.”

“My face is my fortune, sir,” she said,
With a twinkle in her eye.
“And so is mine,” quoth the crafty lad
When parting time drew nigh.
With the lamp turned low,
As he rose to go,
Did they talk about the weather?
Not a single word
Nor a sound was heard
As they put their wealth together.

Another Adventure of Shylock Bones

By A. DON’T UNCOIL.

As I entered, Shylock Bones was sitting before the fire, musing. He did not notice my entrance, so absorbed was he in melancholy meditation. Even after I went over, as was my wont, and gently caressed his slippers, he maintained his ratiocinative taciturnity. But I never could understand that wonderful bean.

“Ah, Watson,” he murmured, “you have been drinking.”

“Pardon, but you are mistaken,” I said reproachfully.

“No, you walk unsteadily; there is an unnatural lustre in your eyes. Besides your breath is redolent with the fumes of wine,” I sat aghast at his penetration.

We sat in silence for three hours and eight minutes. Once when I wasn’t looking he drew a hypodermic syringe from his pocket and injected paris green into his arm. “What, again, Shylock?” I faltered. “Mind your own business,” said Shylock Bones in his usual pitiless, analytical style.

Gradually a dark frown gathered on his inscrutable forehead. At last he spoke.

“Do you remember,” he said, “when I found Why Patriotic Caruso Left His Wife, Who Killed Everlean Thaw, and Why Is A Rooster? My dear Watson, these affairs dwindle into insignificance—”

A step sounded without.

“Fe, fo, fum,” I chanted, “I smell the blood—”

A tall, fat, frightened youth entered. Shylock Bones flicked the ash from his Fatima and smiled.

“I used to enjoy it myself, years ago,” he said pleasantly.

“Enjoy what?” the youth ejaculated.

“Sliding down bannisters,” said Bones, and our visitor choked.

“How did you guess it?” he finally managed to stammer.

“The peculiar manner in which your trousers are worn,” said Bones didactically, “permits but two explanations—horses or bannisters. I tossed a coin and it came bannisters.”

“Bannisters wins,” confessed the visitor. “Look,” and he produced the following clipping:

A HALLUCINATION?

A most unheard of and mystifying phenomenon has occurred in one of the dormitories the past few days. The other evening as A. Soph O’Moore was about to retire he heard heavy footsteps ascending the stairs to his floor, and thinking it was his roommate, went and opened the door. He was amazed to find the corridor empty. Last night he was awakened about 1 a. m. by the same steps. When the latter had reached the landing O’Moore sprang out of bed and rushed to the door! As before the hall was empty!

O’Moore lives in, etc., etc.

“That was the only solution I could think of,” our visitor continued, “and so I tried it two or three times myself.”

Bones raised the clipping to his sensitive nostrils. “Dartmouth Semi Weakly!” he shouted and leaped to his feet.

“This is serious.”

“I thought it was funny,” I interposed, but stopped when I saw the look in Bones’ eye.

“Have you pistols?” he asked in that tense, nervous manner of his. I nodded and we followed the youth to his dormitory. We climbed the stairs slowly and, after a brief examination of the top floor, entered our client’s room.

Bones made a hurried survey of the apartment and then, turning abruptly, left the room. We waited fully three-quarters of an hour in perfect silence, which was broken once by the sound of hammering somewhere below.

At last Bones returned and asked if he could examine the room across the hall. O’Moore procured the key from the janitor and then we all three filed into the room. It was empty save for a pile of postals on the floor beneath the mail-slot. Bones snatched up several with a cry of delight. They were all twenty-four-hour notices from the Registrar’s office.

An hour later as we waited in O’Moore’s room we heard the lower door bang and someone tramped up the stairs. Up came the steps, nearer and nearer, with such an appalling crescendo that my heart pounded. Once I started for the door, but Bones’ hand was upon me like a vise. The last landing was reached and now the final ascent began. O’Moore crouched in a corner and nibbled his nails. Bones was as alert as a pointer, nostrils dilated, eyes piercing the gloom like diamond points.

The footsteps ceased, there came a metallic click from the letter-slot opposite, a soft brushing sound, and a scream of pain. Bones flung the door wide and the three of us piled out. At the bottom of the stairs lay a man rolling in agony. Bones ran his finger along the bannister, and held it up stained with blood.

“I must have driven that nail through too far,” he murmured apologetically—“but pshaw! it’s only a scratch. Get up, Skeet, old boy!”

A lady wrenched her knee one day; I asked her how it was that night—She grinned a fetching little grin, And said 'twas out of sight.

“Ah,” soliloquized the man on the desert isle, who had had nothing to eat for three days. “If I had some eggs, I’d have some ham and eggs, if I had some ham.”

Lord, Have Mercy On Us!

And the time was come for the sacred anthem, and the choir rose in their places. And there was music of organ-pipes, touched even to surpassing harmony by the chief musician. And when a few bars were past, the choir did open up their mouths and sing. And the sound of their singing was great, so that the roof of the Temple shook and trembled therewith. And all the multitude kept silence for it was a good beginning.

Now the song was five words: “Lord, Have Mercy Upon Us.” There was a theme, with variations. And while that they who sang did keep to the theme, all was well. But when the variations were come, behold, some did keep to one note for whole seconds together, while that the others did skirmish about for harmonies, the which they were sore put to find.

And the multitude began to smile the smile of mild amusement, perceiving which, they of the choir whose minds were frivolous, did grin through their music. And the chief musician, which sat always at his organ, observed these grins, and was sore chagrined.

And about this time the voices did vary the breadth of a hair from the tune, so that the chief musician did rise in his place and swing his arms in the air, even as two flails. Whereupon the organ, being neglected, did merely sigh, so that the singers were constrained to proceed alone, even as sheep not having a shepherd. And the discord was great, so that the chief musician perspired with mortification.

And ever the voices pronounced the words, “Lord, have mercy upon us,” until the sound thereof verged even unto monotony. There was scraping of feet, and coughing, and some among the multitude did even hum the words, “Lord, have mercy upon us.”

And about this time it came to pass that the players upon stringed instruments did join in, so that the diversity of noises was multiplied. And the scraping of feet and sighing became as an accompaniment thereto.

But even as all things must end, so the anthem approached unto a climax. And the chief musician gesticulated as one who will make an impression. And the choir did strive nobly, and came again upon the key, so that the final chord was even as heaven after hell.

And there was a sigh among the pews, even as a man coming out of ether.

And the chief worshipper said, “Let us pray.”

Obituary.

Mr. Wax N. Taper died of a burning fever at 11.30 p.m. yesterday at his summer home, Candle-Abre-on-the-Shelf. He early evinced signs of a brilliant career and lived to be shining light in his community. Public opinion marked him as a wicked man but his only vices were smoking, taking snuff and going out late nights. He was a standing member of the Baptist Church and was dipped in this town at an early age. In life he was fat, warm-hearted and a trifle hot-headed, but he quickly wasted away under the ravages of the burning fever.

His last words, when informed by his physician that his end was near, were, "I'll be blowed!" He is survived by one sun who will carry on his business.
